Garbage mess vexes city: how will it all stack up?

The City Council grappled last week with the sticky issue of garbage collection, but couldn't agree on a way out of the mess.

Councilman Joe Cota reported to fellow council members that the city's garbage contractor, Lee Martelli, is faced with real financial problems because of the present method of operation.

Some 300 residences in Seaside are not paying for garbage collection, and Cota said the only recourse open to the city is to institute a mandatory method of garbage collection for the entire city, as well to extend an exclusive franchise to one contractor.

Cota also said that making the land owner responsible for the garbage collection bills would increase revenues to the contractor and insure that the approximately 700 homes, most of them rentals, that are non-paying, would pay.

"It's either that, or go back to the other people and raise their rates substantially to carry the other people in Seaside," Cota said. "There's going to have to be a possible change of rates upwards in Seaside."

But Councilman Steve Ross protested that inaugurating a method of mandatory participation in city refuse collection and extending rights of exclusive franchise to one contractor would not be fair.

"To penalize the average, little, struggling citizen by saying he can't have garbage.. I'd oppose that," Ross said.

Ross noted that such a system would hurt not only the individual home owner who carries his garbage to the Marina Dump and pays the nominal dumping fee, rather than participate in the Municipal Garbage Collection System, but would also jeopardize the small business of others who collect and dispose of refuse on a limited scale in Seaside.

Mayor B.J. Dolan wondered whether the garbage contractor might not be losing the business of those 300 residences through an error in administration or bookkeeping on the part of his own firm, and he agreed with Councilman Ross that restricting the disposal of garbage to only one agent would not be desirable.

Councilman Oscar Lawson said some definitions of "garbage," "refuse," "rubbish," and related matters would be needed for intelligent consideration of the matter. Cota added that "Seaside has a substantial delinquency ratio of 15,000 a year," only about half of which is returned to the contractor through collection agencies.

Police Chief Ben Cooper suggested the city council consider enforcement of city ordinances dealing with health and safety as one way to regulate the problem.

"The Police Chief has the right to cite people who don't have their garbage collected," Cooper said. "You could get the route men to make a list of those who don't pay, and stop collection. Let it collect for a couple of weeks, and we'd cite them."

But that approach didn't seem to offer the best alternative to city councilmen. And City Atty. Carey Royster said there is a "serious legal doubt" as to whether the city can enforce a mandatory collection ordinance.

"Almost every city ordinance I've seen leaves some sort of exemption for the private homeowner," Royster explained. "If someone does the job themselves in a manner that stisfies the health

The importance of being early

Community relations concern police

Seaside police aren't being shot at and firebombed with the regularity they encountered in the angry days of the 1960s, but comunity relations is nevertheless an important aspect of their work.

Three police employes are assigned full-time to that division of the department. They visit schools, hold community meetings, sponsor an annual bicycle rodeo, and teach a high school class on criminal justice--all as part of their task of informing the public.

The community relations division was established in 1968, following a string of what Officer Jim Davis, division head, describes as "mini-riots" of the same sort that were being experienced on a larger scale in many urban centers.

"Every officer here was shot at at least once," Davis explained. "There was on a ambush where officers were fired upon with shotguns."

Although none of these assaults produced any deaths or serious injury, they aroused public conern for the safety of the police, as well as police concern for their image in the community.

"There was a real lack of communication between the police here in town and the people," Davis said. "They didn't know why we were doing certain things, and we didn't have the time to explain. We were running 24 hours a day, and several times we had to call mutual aid for help from other police."

To improve communications in a violatile political atmosphere and a highly explosive time, the Seaside police started community "rap sessions" in which police went into the community to meet with various groups and explain their job and responsibilities.

"We looked at ourselves before we blamed anybody else," Davis said. "We found that the rap sessions were the best things we were doing then; young adults and teenagers were invited to talk and we could see that we were starting to cancel some of the problems out."

In June of 1970, the community relations program got a large boost through the approval of a three-year, $38,000 grant from the Justice Department, through the California Council on Criminal Justice. Officer Terry Mangan was placed in charge of the program and its functions were expanded.

Representatives of the police department now visit every elementary and junior high school classroom in Seaside as part of KOP Week--Know Our Police. The policemen explain the nature of their jobs, basic safety rules for bicycling, swimming, and other elementary precautions.

At the junior high school level, the police show film strips and used record players to instruct students in safety rules, narcotics, and the basics of law enforcement, as well as the legislative process.

Davis said there are not many stereotypes about police and law enforcement among school children until they reach the ninth grade level and beyond; there, peer-group conditioning and pressure seem to exert some influence on their ideas about police.

The police community relations division is nestled in a small corner of the police department, located directly beneath city hall. There, four employes work, surrounded by a plethora of literature on everything from baa checks to laws dealing with implied consent. Sitting atop a tall file cabinet is a two-foot-high plastic imitation marijuana plant.

On various days of the week, school children stream in and out of the police department on tours conducted by the community relations personnel--Davis, Jay Hill, and Lisa Anderson. The students are shown a glass-encased collection of narcotica paraphernalia, as well as a representative cache of weapons confiscated from suspects.

Davis teaches a class for 124 students at Seaside High School known as Survey of Law Enforcement, intended to give students a broad view of the legislative, law enforcement, and judicial functions of society. The division cooperates with participating business in the regular dissemination of current information on bad checks, and has sponsored an annual bike rodeo stressing riding uafety and skills.

The division is now engaged in trying to implement a neighborhood watch program, in which methods of crime prevention, especially burglary, are discussed with residents of various neighborhoods and steps are taken to increase security.

The division is also involved with the Seaside police department's advanced crime prevention program. A computer hookup to Monterey Peninsula College gives the department daily readouts on probable types of crimes and their locations each day of the year, based on crime statistics for the last eight years in the city.

A printout for a certain day might specify a high probability of, say, residential burglary in a certain girl section of the city. That information is then passed along to patrol officers, who concentrate their efforts in that particular area. A recent advisory stated:

"Look for house, entry through back window, forced entry. Probability for stolen items: 30 per cent money, 15 per cent jewelry, 46 per cent living room appliances.

A NEW FIRE ENGINE joined the Seaside Fire Department's lineup of equipment last week. The Tele-Squirt truck, which was purchased from a firm in Wisconsin for $60,648, features a 50-foot aerial ladder with a nozzle that can squirt up to 1,000 gallons of water a minute. The machine was admired by Chief John Kayser (left) and Charles King, Training Officer. (John Perkins photo).

Infant center fills need

By ROBERT MISKIMON

Much of the rhetoric of social progress has been concerned recently with child care centers for working mothers. But what about the very young--the children of single mothers who have just as much right to work or study?

Part of the answer can be inferred from the successful operation for the last four years of the Infant Care Center located at St. Matthias Episcopal Church at Noche Buena and Kimball in Seaside. There, 58 children ranging in age from six weeks to four and five years receive the nourishing environment universally recognized as the necessary foundation for a good education.

It's been an uphill struggle, but not one devoid of outside assistance, remarked director Mrs. Wilhelmenia Vaughn.

"We started four years ago, with no money, in the church," she recalled. "At the time, I was upset that no one cared for infants. So, St. Matthias allowed us to open in space they donated. The parents and I provided the money for what we needed; we've always provided breakfast and lunch, whether or not we could afford it."

Mrs. Vaughn left a position with the Monterey Peninsula Unified School District as head instructor for the children's center in Seaside to start what was a totally new venture for her, the mothers, and for the Monterey Peninsula. Since then, another such center has opened in the country.

"When I used to talk about babies out of the home, people didn't understand," Mrs. Vaughn said. "There were only three in the state at the time, and it was something completely new to me."

In the early, lean months of the Infant Care Center, donations came from many organizations and individuals, including service clubs and veterans' organizations. Now the center receives some $92,000 in state funds for its annual operation and occupies practically all of the church building as well as a three-bedroom home across the street.

"Because the center was founded on the conviction and dedication of one woman, rather than being funded by any organization or governmental body, the financial beginning for the center has been extremely rocky," Mrs. Vaughn noted in a short history written last year.

"For the first eight months, registration fees and donations from local organizations were the only income. Understandably, few if any families were able to pay the full monthly fee of $85, although even this amount did not cover costs for one child for one month.

"The center survived this period only because the director and founder...did not draw any salary and because the community responded to some extent with donations and with some volunteer help."

In 1973, the center signed a contract with the Monterey County Department of Social Services using 75 per cent federal funds under the Talmadge Amendment and Senate Bill 796, to finance the operation of the center for low-income and welfare families.

Subsequent to the visit of the director of that county agency to the center, the contract was

Students thrive on computer work

The major problem of using computer terminals in Monterey Peninsula Unified School District schools seems to be taking the equipment away from one school so another can use it.

Four terminals are circulated among the elementary schools, five more are housed at the junior highs, and six more are at the high schools. Students and staff members are encouraged to do additional learning by checking out the equipment for home use.

Although the original object was exposure, Bob DeWeese, program planning director, stated that the level of advancement and sophistication is occurring at a much more rapid rate than anticipated. The current terminal system is an excellent one for new users; however, due to the rapid progress rate of students, uses need to be expanded and more variety provided.

Primary terminal contact was to acquaint students with the general concepts of computers in a relaxed casual atmosphere, rather than one of directed activity, in which they could react spontaneously.

Since the beginning of September, the MPUSD Computer Literacy program has reached students in each secondary school and about half of our elementary schools.

Initial exposure to the terminals was done through the school staff. Enthusiastic members then organized demonstrations for the intermediate grades. Student familiarity with the terminal begins with the aid of an instruction book and progresses from games, to messages and simple programming. Students at the junior high level learn computer application through mathematics and even one aviation course. Monterey High School boasts a programming course, the only computer class as such. However, the high school students make use of the terminals in math, biology, physics, and oceanography through simulations and applications.

Both Cypress and Marina La via High School students have become enthusiastically involved, and have become teaching resources for nearby elementary school students. Several students are beginning to write programs for general district use. A Fremont Junior High student, Richard Miller, is working on Spanish language programs, while Jeff Norton, Monterey High School senior, writes programs for general use in the computers public access storage.

DeWeese will work with math and business departments to develop organized programs.

Marina Parade entries grow

At last report the entries for Marina's Annual Spring Parade and Celebration have reached 40, with more coming in daily.

Latest entries include: The Easy Riders Unicycle Club of Monterey; The Marina Fire Department; Miss Gambi Kenton, solo junior majorette from San Jose, winner of many awards throughout California; the color guard of American Legion Post No. 31, Salinas; The Marina Misfits novelty entry; Marina's Miss Ginger Street, gymnast; Kyle and Karry Galloway, Marina, decorated bikes; The Profit family of Los Altos with two novelty horse riders and a horse drawn vehicle; the color guard of Squadron 694, Sons of the American Legion and Economy Printing Company, Marina, decorated van.

The parade, to be held at 1 p.m. Sunday, April 27, will be bigger than last year's with more than 150 entries expected. Spectator attendance is expected to exceed last year's record total.

Following the parade there will be a carnival with food and beverage booths, a barbecue feed, live entertainment and an awards ceremony, in the vacant lot adjacent to the UCB building on Vista Del Camino.

A record amount of cash awards and trophies will be presented to the winning entries.

This year's parade theme is "Liberty" in keeping with the growing list of activities leading to America's Bi-Centennial in 1976.

expanded so that full costs of caring for 30 welfare children are now provided from the county. Other parents pay fees on a sliding scale based on income, ranging from a maximum of $1.25 per hour for children under two and one-half years, and $1.05 per hour for those over the same age.

Even though the program has grown to the residence across the street to serve parents not only from Seaside, but from Marina, Pacific Grove, and Carmel, there still is a need for more equipment and material. For instance: some of the items which are needed in the new quarters and for which there are no funds include: books, records, toys, a record player, tape recorder, listening center with earphones, radio, desk, file cabinet, washer-dryer, dish washer, copy machine, and furniture.

Although the center is for anyone who wants to use it, center teachers said the about half the children credentialed children currently enrolled are single-parent children, whose to help make the program seeks to avoid rigid disciplinarian tactics and does not frustrate the very young by trying to pump reading, writing and arithmetic into their heads, there is a structure to the daily program. The day begins with breakfast at 8 a.m., followed by free play until 9 a.m.

The Peabody language experience--a complete programmed package of instruction involving stories, puppets, and music--is given starting at 9 a.m., followed by snacks and more play time outside for field trips at 9:30 a.m. Quiet time is from 10:45 a.m. to 11 a.m., when lunch is served until 11:30 a.m.

Children take naps until 2 p.m., when they have more play time, science activities, followed by more quiet tiem, wash up, and preparation for leaving.

Because of the special community need which the center services, Mrs. Vaughn believes it needs special support.

FEEDING the very young is one of the most important duties of the staff at the Infant Care Center, as proven by Voncile Chapel. (John Perkins photo).

"Bank of America helped my husband set up his own business. Now they help with all our banking."

When it comes to banking, Dora Banks and her husband are like a lot of Californians.

They were looking for a bank to serve a variety of needs. And they chose Bank of America.

They made a good choice.

Because Bank of America offers every kind of banking service. From checking and savings accounts to special trust accounts, safe deposit boxes, BankAmericard® and a full range of business banking services.

But that's not all you get at Bank of America. You also get the safety of having all your accounts insured up to $40,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

And you get convenience, too. In fact, with more than a thousand offices in California to serve you, Bank of America is maybe the most convenient bank you'll ever find.

Put all that together, and you can see why more Californians depend on Bank of America than on any other bank.

It's true. Just ask Dora.

Depend on us. More Californians do.

City's garbage mess

and safety standards, I don't see that they can be compelled to participate."

The City Council, after lengthy discussion, left the garbage matter right where it was: in an amorphous heap.

But decisive action was taken on a pair of resolutions to implement the city's system of block grant funding for the community development program, which replaces separate funding for the Seaside Redevelopment Agency and related functions.

Finn Sutton, community development aide, told the council that the first instrument would establish specific amounts to be paid as local grant-in-aid-funds and loans; the second authorized Crocker National Bank to act as the depositary for the block funds.

The City of Seaside is entitled to $1.7 million in community development block grant funds, and some $807,000 of that amount already has been allocated for completion of redevelopments projects. And some $300,000 out of the funds will be used for relocation payments to those businesses that chose not to reinstitute their businesses after leaving the area recently cleared at the auto wrecker yards along Del Monte, Sutton said.

One of the advantages to the city of Seaside of the new type of federal funding is that more local control will be permitted, as well as more local discretion in use of the funds.

Both Sutton and City Mgr. Dudley Lapham noted that some salaries of employes of the Redevelopment Agency had been drastically scaled down as a result of the city assuming control of that agency, since salary levels among city and redevelopment personnel were brought into parity.

In a related matter, the city council referred to the city staff for study, and possible later funding under community development block grant funds, a request by The Rev. H.H. Lusk for financial assistance for Operation Shoestrings.

Lusk informed the council in a letter that the project is nearing completion of an addition to the present building providing 2,400 sq. ft. of space, costing between $35,000 to $40,000. The organization wants $30,000 from the city to cover cost of materials, supplies, and labor on the addition to the building, as well as $20,000 for the construction of a new one.

Lusk said Operation Shoestring houses 135 children from the ages of three to 13, five days a week for 10 to 12 hours each day. The successful completion of the new building would double present capacity, to house another 125 children. All are children of welfare or low-income families, and enrollment is about 45 per cent white and 55 percent non-white, lusk said.

Participating families who are not on welfare pay for the service on a sliding scale, based on income.

The City Council also approved the purchase of a $16,150 ambulance for the Fire Department to replace the one which is in need of major repair. The council, at its last meeting, gave approval to paying for the ambulance out of reserve funds. The new machine will be a 1975 Chevrolet Vanguard Ambulance.

At the request of Councilman Oscar Lawson, who asked for a staff report on possible ways of tightening the city's gun control ordinance, Police Chief Ben Cooper informed the council that, in his opinion, present city ordinances and state law are adequate, if properly enforced.

"It is my opinion that we are in substantial compliance with state law and even more restrictive," Cooper said. "In reading the law and the Attorney General's opinion, it gives local authorities the discretion whether or not they want to license dealers to sell concealable firearms; if they do, they must follow this law.

"The city ordinance directs the Chief of Police to investigate and issue permits to establishments, therefore I believe it only logical that the Chief of Police would be the licensing authority."

Rummage sale set

The organization of a parade is a costly and time-consuming operation.

Such is the case of the Marine Annual Spring Parade and Celebration.

The time-consuming part is taken care of by the many volunteers who organize and control the parade, but to help offset the expenses the Parade Committee incurs, there are two fund raising events planned.

The first will be a cake and rummage sale beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday, April 5, at the Safeway Shopping Center.

Anyone interested in donating items or making cakes should contact Emil Smith at 384-6865 or King Walters at 384-7549. The sale ends at 5 p.m. and live entertainment is planned.

Following this event the Parade Committee is sponsoring a "Spaghetti Dinner for the Family," Beginning at 4 p.m. at the Marina Community Center, 211 Hillcrest Ave., the dinner will feature spaghetti, tossed salad, French bread and a variety of beverages. There will be soft drinks, coffee to be served by the entrants of the Miss Marina Contest and wine will be on sale.

The cost of the dinner is $1.50 for adults, $1 for kids and $.75 for senior citizens older than 60 years.

Peninsula YWCA to celebrate several events

The YWCA of the Monterey Peninsula will spend a week celebrating three important events: its fifth anniversary at a non-profit agency serving women and girls on the Monterey Peninsula, the Grand Opening of its new offices in downtown Monterey, and as Open House to celebrate the opening of the YWCA Women's Resource Center. The week-long celebration will begin Monday, March 31, and continue through Friday, April 4.

The new offices are located at the corner of Alvardo and West Franklin Street on the second floor of the Ordway Building. The YWCA, since leaving Monterey last September, has been looking diligently for a permanent home in Monterey to be centrally located and available to as many women as possible on the Peninsula.

The new location offers free parking in the lot next to the Wells Fargo Bank and is only a block away from bus connections leading to all parts of the Peninsula.

Special events during the week will include a program for all YWCA membership and the public as well. Wednesday at 1 p.m. at the Casa Estrada, Mrs. Paul Riebe, past YWCA board member, will be the honored guest at a tea. She will present a talk about her recent trip to India and Nepal.

The trip was sponsored by the National Committee of the United States and Canada for volunteers and UNICEF. During her stay, Mrs. Riebe had an opportunity to study the YWCA in these countries and will focus much of her presentation on developments in the World YWCA.

On Thursday, the YWCA will have an open house in the offices from noon to 8 p.m. All women are invited to drop in during those hours to learn about the newly created YWCA Women's Resource Center, featuring daily drop-in with coffee for women in the downtown area, whether they are working or shoppers.

Information about YWCA programs and registration for the Spring Session, beginning April 7, will be available during the week and especially during Thursday's open house.

Branson takes new position

Former Monterey Supervisor Chairman Willard Branson has been appointed to a new position with a Monterey Peninsula Cable Television Company. Mrs. Rowena Cohan, president of Ocean View Cablevision, Inc., has announced the appointment of Branson to the staff of Ocean View Cablevision as vice president for sales, programming and community affairs.' Ocean View Cablevision provides cable TV service to Seaside, Del Rey Oaks, Marina, Pacific Grove and Asilomar Beach.

Branson said he has taken on the position because it presents a challenge and an opportunity to bring full news and community affairs programming to the cities of the Monterey Peninsula.

Altrusa Club to presents symposium at clubs

The Altrusa Club of the Monterey Peninsula will present a symposium of the four major classified women's clubs of the Monterey Peninsula, Monday evening, March 24, at the La Playa Hotel, Carmel.

The Quota Club of Seaside will be among the clubs participating, which will also include representatives of the Monterey-Pacific Grove Quota Club, Soroptimist International, and Zonta International.

Purpose of the meeting is exploration and exchange of each club's current aims, objectives and major projects. This will offer an opportunity for possible cooperation in joint undertakings to fill some unmet community needs, as well as helping to avoid future duplication of effort.

Jean Darragh, of KMST's "Mid-day" show will be moderator for the symposium; Peter Ferrants, recently honored as "Citizen of the Year" by the Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce, will speak on the need for ramps outside public buildings of the Peninsula to make them accessible to the physically handicapped.

A special guest will be Terry Brickley.

The local Altrusa Club has taken a leadership role in the area of ramps for the handicapped, having been responsible for the installation of a portable ramp at the Pacific Grove junior high school auditorium. The club is currently raising funds for a permanent ramp at the Pacific Grove public library.

Observance of International Women's Year 1975, in which Altrusa Clubs throughout the world are participating, prompted the local Club to reactivate the symposium format, which it initiated in 1967.

Monday's meeting will be preceded by a social hour, at 6:30, with dinner at 7:15 p.m. Further information and reservations are available from Jane B. Hexter, program coordinator, at 624-1975.

Staff development plan reviewed

A staff development program for MPUSD teachers to enable translation of learning theory into practice was reviewed recently by the board of trustees of the Monterey Peninsula United School District.

Principals and two teachers from each of the schools are participating in the five-session course to teach them to observe and analyze classroom skill areas which promote a high level of student learning. Class members meet once per week to observe randomly selected classes in the district to identify effective methods and techniques.

Areas considered are: Is the teacher teaching to an objective? Is the objective appropriate to the learners? Is the teacher monitoring and adjusting? What teacher behaviors are helping objective accomplishment? What teacher behaviors are hindering objective accomplishment?

The observers send written comments to the classroom teacher they visited on particularly effective techniques used with the students. This observation of good techniques has resulted in improved communication between teachers, improved skill awareness and identification and has given a positive emphasis to classroom visitations rather than a critical one.

Other teachers are encouraged to take part in the training through visitations. In the training sessions, teachers also learn about a variety of teacher behaviors related to five areas of learning theory: motivation, involvement, reinforcement, retention and transfer.

On the basis that trained observers can make better use of learning theory, the district hopes to expand the program to all teachers through those who have already participated in the sessions.

Film on Norway to be shown in Carmel

"Norway is a land that is a nature-lover's paradise and a country of hospitable people and colorful traditions," says Ed Lark, a professional travel-adventure film producer.

Lark, of Scandinavian descent and a native of San Francisco, began producing travel films when he was 18 years old, and since that time has traveled more than a million miles in the production of his numerous films. His latest film "Norway" will be shown in eight Bay Area locations as part of the Explorama series with Lark appearing in person to narrate the two hour program. Performances include an 8:15 p.m. showing Friday, April 11 at the Sunset Cultural Center Auditorium in Carmel.

Lark spent six months on location in Norway during two separate trips in 1973 and 1974 doing the photography for the film and spent more of 1974 and part of 1975 editing in preparation for some 350 performances he will give throughout the United States and Canada. Music and sound effects were recorded on location, but Lark appears in person at each performance to deliver the narration live.

What was his most memorable experience in Norway? "My various encounters with people," Lark enthusiastically relates. "There is something about the attitude of the Norwegians, perhaps it's their Viking heritage, they seem to have solved many of the human problems that much of the rest of the world is still grappling with. At the same time they still maintain fine traditions, but are not opposed to exploring new ways of doing things. It's a rare combination of qualities that I saw reflected in many different people I met while making the film and it is those personal encounters with the Norwegians that I treasure the most."

Lark looks at Norway from two perspectives in his film: as a visitor would see the country and as the Norwegians see themselves. Because of the two perspectives he criss-crossed the country several times, traveling to such remote areas as Hammerfest, the most northerly city in the world, and a tour of islands north of the Artic Circle. He also photographed in the capital of Oslo, Bergen, Tromso, the fishing island of Vaeroy with its huge bird sanctuary, Hardanger Fjord, where Grieg often sough inspiration, and Jostedal Glacier, Europe's largest ice field.

Highlights of the film include a traditional wedding complete with folk constumes in the fjord community of Voss; Constitution Day in Oslo; the Mid-Summer Celebration in Gol; and a Rock Festival in Haugesund.

Reserved seat tickets for Norway are on sale at the Julia Marlow Box Office in Carmel and at Abinante Music Store in Monterey.

NORWEGIAN CHILDREN perform a mock wedding ceremony in film to be shown at Carmel's Sunset Center.

Seaside Blue Birds celebrate

March 16 was very special to the Seaside B l u e Birds this year. Although the actual anniversary date is March 17, the girls found themselves very excited over the special Birthday Mass held at St. Francis Xavier Church in Seaside.

About 75 children and their parents attended. A slide presentation preceded the mass describing the organization's objectives and purpose. An impressive candle lighting ceremony took place. Twelve candles symbolizing the months of the year were used to show Camp Fire Girls identifying with nature and life.

Patricia Wesley did the narration. Those lighting the candles were Margret Hennesy, Trisha Justice, Mary T. McDaniel and Mercedes Wesley. In charge of the Offertory gifts were Tina Gill and Deborah McDaniel.

A red white and blue flower arrangement on the mangle greeted the guests at the reception held in the church's rectory after the Mass. Finger sandwiches and other treats were enjoyed. In charge of refreshments was Charlotte Kapphahn.

The people who made this possible were Fr. Larry Kambitch, Fr. James Henry and Sr. Gladys Gunther who coordinated the materials available and who photographed the groups in action.

Scholarships offered by Fort Ord groups

Scholarships for bright, but needy students are being offered by three Fort Ord groups this spring. A total of 11 young people can be assisted.

Five high school graduates have a chance at the $750-per-year scholarships offered by the Fort Ord Thrift Shop, while both the Officers Wives Club and the NCO Wives Club offer $500 scholarships to qualified students, three for each club.

Achievements of 3.5 to 4.0 grade average is needed to qualify for consideration for the Thrift Shop's offer, said Mrs. Milum D. Perry, Scholarship Chairman.

The ladies who head the wives' clubs programs reported that candidates will be judged on scholastic achievement, participation in extracurricular activities and financial need. Mrs. Les Ihara of the Officers Wives' Club noted that the group will consider dependents of either active duty, retired or deceased officers, and the NCO Wives' Club chairman, Mrs. Patricia Chaves, reported that their three scholarships are available only to dependents of active, retired or deceased NCOs.

Spring graduates may obtain applications from the school's registrar, which should be completed and submitted for judging between now and mid-April.

He sings way to degree

Floyd Gingrich

Capt. Floyd E. Gingrich, 351st Strategic Missile Wing, a native of Seaside, obtained his bachelor of arts degree in music from California Baptist College prior to his enlistment in the Air aforce.

He is working towards his master of arts degree in voice and music literature at Central Missouri State University (CMSU).

Captain Gingrich's interest in music began in 1959 when he began taking clarinet lessons. He started seriously studying music while in college.

As part of the final requirements for his master's degree, Captain Gingrich performed a graduate recital of baritone vocal selections at CMSU.

Captain Gingrich and his wife, Paula May, live in Knob Noster, Mo., and have one son, Brian, age five.

Army plays Navy In South County

Has the Army turned into the Navy? Go. "A" of the Army Combat Developments Experimentation Command just may have. Led by Second Lt. George Birdsong, 25 members of the unit are making their way down the Salinas River in rubber rafts as a volunteer exercise in adventure training.

The Hunter Liggett Military Reservation soldiers embarked from the dam at Lake San Antonio with two days' rations, sleeping bags and light camping gear stowed in eight rafts.

"We'll be camping along the river banks at night," explains Birdsong, "wherever we happen to be when the sun goes down."

The 120-mile journey will end just south of Moss Landing, probably some time Thursday. "It's difficult to give a time estimate," says Birdsong, "because we don't know of any previous trips to judge by. Hopefully we'll have water all the way until we hit the mudflats near Moss Landing. We're counting on our supply truck being able to find us Wednesday evening when our chow for the next leg is supposed to arrive.

The group is in constant touch with its headquarters by radio. A pilot with the 155th Aviation Co. is making a daily visual check on progress of the group. On their voyage the adventurers passed under the bridges and surprised onlookers at King City, Greenfield, Soledad, Gonzales, Chualar, and Highways 68 and One.

'Age of Enlightenment' study

The concepts developed in the "Age of Enlightenment" together with the forces which came to bear in the early 19th Century will be studied in Monterey Peninsula College's next Gentrain course, "The Nineteenth Century: Part I."

Classes will start Tuesday, April 1 and will be held each Tuesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. for two weeks. Gentrain courses are open to students for college credit and to community members on a non-credit basis for those who are just interested in learning about their world, said Robert Nelson, Gentrain director. No tests or papers are required under this option.

The years to be studied in part one of the "Nineteenth Century," are from 1790 to 1860. "The 19th Century, which was built on the governing and economic theories of the late 18th century, the Industrial Revolution and the technology which resulted, and the forces of liberalism and nationalism, significantly changed the western world," Nelson said.

The humanities reflected these changes and challenged the thesis that the arts must be judged by the rigid standards and academic systems which had been established according to the tenets of classicism and the rationalism of the 18th century.

"Finally, the emergency of Romanticism, unique period in western history, expressed the concern for the individual rather than for the typical and idealized aspirations for perfection.

Crocker's changing banking.

For a long time, the business of banking has been run one way–the bank's way.

But now, we're changing all that. I'm Tom Wilcox, Chairman of the Board of Crocker Bank.

Most people feel that most banks are just too big and too busy to care. And in all too many cases a bank's performances prove that the customer once again is right.

The old joke about "Bankers' Hours" loses its charm after you've run three blocks to find the door already locked.

And a crowded line at a teller's window is a lousy place to spend your lunch hour. Particularly when there are other windows open–but no tellers.

So, Crocker's changing banking. Listening to you and responding–as quickly as possible.

Starting with the problems that we already know bother you. Things like long lines and short hours.

In the weeks and months to come, we'll be changing schedules and procedures whenever and wherever possible. Remolding and revitalizing our ways to fit yours.

We think it's a good idea, a bank that's willing to listen to you for a change.

So, let us hear from you. Just write, Thomas R. Wilcox, Chairman of the Board of Crocker Bank, P.O. Box 38029, San Francisco 94138.

And then come into Crocker and try banking your way for a change.

Crocker's changing banking.

We cut electric and gas use 32% in PG&E offices and service buildings.
Here's how to save on heating & cooling your home.

William C. Wyatt, PG&E Supervising Building Engineer.
We're doing a lot of belt tightening here at PG&E in order to cut down costs in every way possible. And I'm responsible for cutting down energy use in a complex of PG&E buildings.
We turn down thermostats and close drapes at night to minimize heat loss.
Throughout our offices and service centers we reduced the use of electricity and gas by 32%. Here's how you can save on heating and cooling your home:
Most attics in California aren't insulated. You can trim your heating costs up to 20% when your attic is insulated up to "R-19," the standard recommended by the National Bureau of Standards. And if your house is air conditioned you'll save on summer cooling costs, too.
Also, during warm weather, try a less refrigerated setting on the air conditioner. You'll find 78° quite comfortable.
In winter, lower the thermostat to 68° or less during the day and 60° during the night. In fact, if your thermostat is set 6° lower this year than last, you stand to lower your fuel consumption up to 10%.
On sunny days, open the drapes and let the sun warm your home, naturally. And by closing the drapes again in the evening, you can help stop the heat lost through the windows.
If you have a fireplace, shut the damper when the fire's out to prevent heat from escaping up the chimney. Also, keep all exterior doors—including those to the garage, attic and basement—tightly closed.
Dirty furnace filters can block heat, so clean or replace them regularly. And don't forget to have your furnace serviced at least once a year. It'll not only heat your home more efficiently, but the extra savings on fuel will make you feel even more comfortable.
Save energy-you'll save money, too.

In Italy, people give babies tiny keys to ward off convulsions.

Letters to the editor:

Dear Editor:

How realistic are we? How anxious are we to improve society? What are the attributes of man that must be always taken into account if we are not to end up in disillusionment?

We are with feet firmly on the ground if we know what science reveals. Man has been around for millions of years. Up to recently, a few thousand years at most, man for ages inhabited the jungle. Some of our kind are still found there.

The fierce life of the wilderness caused man to have deep instincts of ferocity, irrationality, jealousy, suspiciion, fear and selfishness. As human society developed, the family, the tribe, the clan and, in recent centuries, the nation, man developed attributes of some social concern -- consideration of others, rationality, fairness, trust, kindness and peacefulness.

Thus modern man -- men, women, and children of today -- has a mixed nature, the anti-social and the social. Each of us has this combination in various degrees. A wise, highly ethical personality has far more of the desirable attributes of civilization; a vicious criminal or a dangerously cynical and corrupt individual has far more of the jungle nastiness in his or her makeup.

Is it not crystal clear that all our efforts for a better society must be to advance man towards a far more civilized existence? Towards a wholesome, healthy, secure, ethical tomorrow? Towards human friendliness and fairness? Towards lasting peace? Towards frowning on dissipation in all its debilitating forms? Towards respect for one another? Towards intoleration of all that is well-established over the ages as vile? Towards a beautiful, clean, enchanting world where freedom and a high degree of responsibility will be found in every land on earth? Towards a human environment where no honest person will ever be in want?

We must know man's past, his good and bad points. We must surely not leave those still in the brute stage and dish up excuses of injustices in the past to justify their savage actions in the present.

The past is full of injustices! Every race, every trive, every group of whatever part of the world it lives in, whatever language it spoke, carried on cruel actions, and was the victim of discrimination by others. It made war, and was attacked by war-makers. We must bury the dead past, except to learn its lessons so we can do better from now on. We Must All Indicate Wisdom.

FOOD STAMP SHOPPERS ARE WELCOME

Since we're neighbors let's be friends

YOU CAN ALWAYS DEPEND ON SAFEWAY

SEASIDE 1720 Fremont Blvd. MARINA Marina Village Shopping Center

Ann D. Allen Suggests...

If your're like most modern American homemakers, you've been shopping around for a few ways to fight the high cost of buying food. Now these Magic Seven from the American Dairy Association may help you to do so.

1. Make out menus with shopping lists so you can balance meals costwise during the week.
2. Make a shopping list, check it twice and stick with it.
3. Shop after eating so you won't be tempted.
4. Shop alone. Children can pressure you into buying items not on the list, adding to the food bill.
5. Shop in quantity if you have the storage and freezer space. Check per unit price. Larger containers or quantities are not always the bargain.
6. Shop comparatively before going to the store. Do this with a chart and ads from all the stores around. Figure in gas cost for stores some distance away.
7. Plan make-overs instead of having leftovers. Keep them in glass or plastic containers so you won't forget them.

These seven solutions should help you to get back some percentage of the money you've been spending on food.
